UK Outlook for Saturday 12 Jun 2021 to Saturday 26 Jun 2021:
Confidence is low for this period, but it is most likely that drier and more settled conditions remain across much of the UK. Whilst a good deal of fine and dry weather is possible across central and southern areas, rain and showers are a continuing risk. The north and northwest of the UK may well be more unsettled, with more frequent spells of rain and shorter-lived spells of dry conditions than elsewhere. On the whole, temperatures are likely to be around average, with warm days but still the odd chilly night, and southern areas may occasionally receive spells of warmer than average weather. Into the end of the period, conditions are looking to become more widely settled once again, across the country.
